Excerpt from The Shorthand Clerk: A Manual of Practical Instruction It is only in recent years that the demand for shorthand clerks has assumed wide proportions. Long after the need of their services was felt, the difficulty of obtaining competent men at reasonable salaries proved a barrier to their general employment in mercantile offices. The impetus given to the study of shorthand by the indefatigable exertions of Mr. Isaac Pitman, however, has resulted in an adequate supply of good writers, and there is now hardly a business or professional firm of any standing without its shorthand clerk. Excerpt from Every-Day Educator: A Manual of Self-Instruction and Useful Information There is no royal road to learning. Money cannot buy an education. The boy born on the farm in the backwoods has an equal chance with the boy born in the city mansion. The largest benefit comes from the surmounting of difficulties. We learn to climb mountains only by climbing them. One boy may have ten times as many Opportunities of gathering information as another, but information is not education. Growing minds are measured by the number of original ideas which they produce rather than by the quantity of facts which they contain. Every educated man is, in some sense, self educated. No teacher, whatever his abilities may be, can force an education upon an unwilling pupil; neither can any teacher educate a persistently idle pupil. The boy who has a love for study will die an educated man, no matter what the obstacles in his way. Read the life of Franklin, or of Webster, or of Lincoln, or of Garfield. These men were great in spite of early difficulties, and they owe their greatness largely to the fact that they had the snap, and persistence, and ambition to succeed. Almost any boy can do as much if he will add to his brain the necessary grit and perseverance. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books. A new edition of an occult classic, which includes a new introduction by Mary K. Greer, author of Women of the Golden Dawn, and a new afterword with excerpts from rarely seen documents by Fortune herself describing how the book came about. After finding herself the subject of a powerful psychic attack in the 1930s, famed British occultist Dion Fortune wrote this detailed instruction manual on protecting oneself from paranormal attack. This classic psychic self-defense guide explains how to understand the signs of a psychic attack, vampirism, hauntings, and methods of defense. Everything you need to know about the methods, motives, and physical aspects of a psychic attack and how to overcome it is here, along with a look at the role psychic elements play in mental illness and how to recognize them. The Modern Interpretation of an Ancient Internal Alchemy Manual "Yellow Court Classic" (or "Jade Writing", as the text refers to itself) is one of the core classic manuscripts of the Taoist cannon. Even though this Third Century text has been extensively used in the Alchemy Practice in China (especially in the Highest Purity school) and referenced in many later classics (such as "The Secret of the Golden Flower", by Lu Dong Bin), the present book presents its first full translation to English. The term "Yellow Court" literary means the central area of the Emperor 's Castle, that is open to the Heaven above and connects the Chambers of different Ministries of the Country. Its multifaceted symbolic meaning indicates, in different contexts, center of the body (Dan Tian), spleen as the center of five main viscera (in Traditional Chinese Medicine), a whole human body, or even the overall potentials of the manifestation of the Individual, that includes his or her field of interaction with an environment. This Manuscript provides detailed meditation and visualization instructions, and should be, according to Taoist lore, recited by a practitioner (original Chinese verses, also provided in the current book, sound very melodic) until understood and integrated thoroughly. An adept practitioner would thus develop deep understanding of the own physical and mental functions and abilities to correct and cultivate them to a higher perfection, or according to text: "Dispense thousand troubles and heal hundred diseases, become immune even to fierceness of a tiger and cruelty of wolves and capable to refuse the aging forever". The translation and commentary of the text, developed for the purpose of personal practice, is very contemporary and concentrated on the philosophical understanding and practical use in modern times (commentaries take into account some latest scientific views of the Universe) rather than religious, historical or aesthetic aspects of the work. As the full Chinese version (along with Pinyin and word-by-word English translation) of the ancient manuscript is provided, every reader should be also able to an independent study and discover the benefits according to the own, unique aspirations. Excerpt from Successful Technical Writing: Technical Articles, Papers, Reports, Instruction and Training Manuals, and Books Engineers and scientists write more today than ever before in history. Almost every technical job requires some kind of writing from the formal report of the results of a research project to the preparation of an instruction manual or technical book. And more and more firms are urging their engineers to write magazine articles and technical papers for publication. What about these men who must prepare material for publication? Does writing come easy to them - do they obtain maximum output during the time they write? Talk to engineers and scientists and you'll find the answer to both these questions usually is no. This is unfortunate because the writing burden of engineers and scientists is increasing and will continue to increase as long as technology moves forward. Many solutions to the problem of the increased writing burden are used. Some firms hire huge technical-writing staffs - others farm their writing out to job shops specializing in this work. Advertising agencies form public relations departments to write articles, news, and equipment releases. Hundreds of public relations firms doing little more than technical writing have been spawned in recent years. But none of these completely relieve the individual engineer and scientist of his obligation to write for the advancement of his field and personal career. In writing for publication, every technically trained man faces the familiar problems writers have tried to solve for hundreds of years - where to get ideas, how to develop them into publishable form, how to outline the writing task, and how to get the job done. Excerpt from Manual of Palestinian Arabic, for Self-Instruction The present volume has grown out of a need which I have abundant reason to suppose that others as well as myself have experienced for some means of acquiring a knowledge of the Arabic dialect spoken, not only in Jerusalem, but with some slight variations, in the whole of Palestine, to-day. Such manuals as already exist in English are, for the most part, adapted for the Egyptian Arabic, or for the Libanese such as is spoken in Beirut and in the north, or for other special districts, and may be misleading, especially in nomenclature, to such as have learnt no Arabic whatever; and confusing to those who, like myself, when I came into this part of the country six years ago, are students of the classical language only. Such manuals, moreover, contain many words which occur only in modern, literary Arabic, and which, as not belonging to the vernacular and not understood by the populace, have, in this volume, been carefully excluded. I have sought to adapt this work to the Arabic student interested in the dialect as such, as well as to those requiring the language for daily use in Palestine; also to the passing traveller seeking to make himself understood, and to understand those about him. In these days of multiplication of railways, hotels, and other conveniences of travel, when the often obtrusive dragoman is happily becoming less of a necessity, the demand for a practical phrase-book is increasingly urgent. The necessary limits of such a Manual obviously preclude the possibility of presenting a Grammar which is exhaustive, even in regard to the vernacular; it is however hoped that it may be found to include all that is necessary for such practical use as has been suggested. Excerpt from Manual Instruction Drawing This little Work is intended to assist Teachers who are preparing for the Examinations of the City and Guilds of London Technical Institute. As a text-book for general use, it will, it is hoped, be found useful to pupils of more advanced classes. Manual Instruction has recently been added to the course of Organised Science Schools, and these also may find the following pages meet their requirements in some measure. Solid Geometry might with advantage be taken concurrently with the examples given here. A common remark by students of Solid Geometry is that its application is not apparent, and it is this connection between the theory and its practical application that has been attempted in these pages. Excerpt from Glenny's Manual of Practical Gardening: Containing Plain and Ample Instructions for Every Operation Connected With the Culture of the Ground; Including Landscape Gardening The success which has distinguished the hand-book to the Flower-garden and Greenhouse, and the hand-book to the kitchen-garden and Orchard, both of which are being revised for further editions, suggested the propriety of providing a Manual of Practical Gardening, comprising plain instructions for all the operations necessary in the culture of the ground, commencing with draining, digging, and trenching, and going through all the branches and departments of the art or profession. Not that there was any scarcity of books on the subject, but that the books we possessed already were not plainly written, - that they were adapted for the reading of those who knew a good deal already, instead of being written down to the understandings of the million. Excerpt from A Reform of the Common English Branches of Instruction: Manual for Teachers; An Introduction to the Series of Rational Readers It is unfortunate that, on closer inspection, we must concede that these expectations are not borne out by reality. Dr. Leigh's statistics on illiteracy in the United States given in the Report of the Department of Education of 1870 prove that our country is far ahead of Germany, Switzerland, Holland, Denmark, Sweden and Norway in the percentage of illiterates to population, and of children of school age, not attending schools, to the whole number. And as regards the effects of our schooling upon the attendants - why, every report of Educational Boards will prove, that, as a rule, not more than one or two per cent of the whole number reach the highest grade of the Common School (say, the highest Grammar School Class), while more than fifty per cent never proceed beyond the mere ABC of elementary education. It would be unjust to overlook some of the impediments to a higher standard of education, which retard the progress of our Common Schools - such as the lack of Kindergartens; the admission of too many children into the lowest classes; the irregular attendance of pupils, and the short period during which many of them are kept in school - also the very poor preparation of most teachers for their difficult and all-important calling. But if the efficiency of our methods of teaching were what it ought to be, all these impediments might be overcome. Teaching is a feeding of the mind; if the food of our schools were more palatable, the attendance would be considerably larger, teachers would find more self-enjoyment in their calling and would feel encouraged and stimulated to do more justice to it, and better results of their efforts would lead to further improvements such as are necessary to a more rapid progress. The importance of a great reform in the methods of teaching has not only been long felt but many partial improvements have been made in that direction - yet with results that are far from being satisfactory. If our school reformers have as yet not succeeded in reforming all that ought to be reformed - is it their fault that so much is to be reformed? Excerpt from The Infantry Manual: Containing Directions for the Drill and Instruction of Recruits Attention. On the word Attention, the hands are to fall smartly upon the outside Of the thighs; right heel to be brought up in a line with left; and the proper unconstrained position of a soldier immediately resumed. When the recruit falls in for instruction, he is first to be taught to place himself, on the word Attention, in the position above described, to remain perfectly steady, and to give his whole attention to his commander. Before the word Attention is given, and occasionally during the time of drill, the recruit may be allowed to rest by Stand at Ease, as above explained. When standing at ease for any considerable time in cold weather, the men are permitted to move their limbs, but without quitting their ground, so that upon the word Attention, no one shall have materially lost his dressing in the line. In this case the Stand at Ease is given in the tone of a permission and not of command. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books. Excerpt from A Manual of Useful Studies: For the Instruction of Young Persons of Both Sexes, in Families and Schools A mistake like this is probably not uncommon. It often occurs in schools in which children are directed to learn definitions, or general principles, without any application of them to particular objects, or cases. These, of course, make little impression on the mind, and many of them are soon forgotten. In my course of reading, other young men, I confided in the statements and opinions of authors, without investigating the subjects treated, and in many cases, embraced opinions and theories which experience, observation, and later researches, have scattered to the winds. Excerpt from The Silkworm: Being a Brief Manual of Instructions for the Production of Silk Whatever Opinions may be held as to the feasibility, or as to the profits of silk-culture in this country, the desire for information on the subject and the ambition to embark in the industry, evinced by correspondents of the Department, demonstrate the fact that there will be no difficulty in getting our people to turn their attention to it. Without going into details as to the history of past attempts at silk-culture in North America, it must be obvious to all who thoroughly investigate them that the causes of failure have ever been transient ones. They may be summed up in the statements that (1) labor has found more profitable avenues of employment, and (2) that there has been no home market for the cocoons. At the present time the first statement no longer has force, but the second holds as true now as it ever did. Excerpt from The Claudel-Hobson Carburettor Models for Aero Engines: Instruction Manual The two outstanding features of the Claudel-Hobson carburettor are the peculiar construction of the jet and of the throttle. The Principle of the Jet. In most types of carburettor pure petrol is drawn from the spraying jet or nozzle, and the petrol is neither atomised nor mixed with air until after it quits the jet. The Claudel carburettors are fitted with two distinct patterns of spraying nozzle, described below. The earlier carburettors, known as the R.A.F. models, possess what is known as an "air injector" type of jet, and the later models, known as the "Z" and "Hc" types, are equipped with a "diffuser," mounted above a jet placed towards the foot of the spraying chamber. Both the air injector and the diffuser types commence to atomise the petrol and to mix it with air before it emerges into the main stream of air drawn up from the principal air intake. Thus, when the main stream of air reaches the delivery nozzle in the spraying chamber, instead of receiving a coarse spray of semi-liquid petrol, it is met by a fine, mistlike vapour consisting of richly carburetted air. The petrol is already broken up, and as the jets of vapour impinge across the main air column at an angle from a ring of emulsion holes drilled round the sides of the delivery nozzle, the process of atomising the petrol and carburetting the air is carried out with peculiar completeness and efficiency. In conjunction with the special type of throttle employed, both patterns of jet automatically adjust the proportions of air and petrol in the mixture to suit the varying needs of the engine. The Principle of the Throttle. The throttle is of the revolving barrel type, which combines a delicately graduated control of the gas supply with a frictionless path for the gases at full throttle openings.
